To the Review Committee and Concerned Administrators,

This letter formally addresses the specific allegations outlined in the complaint, corresponding to my detailed refutations in §1, §2, and §3. The compilation of these distinct events attempts to establish a pattern of hostility that I fundamentally challenge.

While I take responsibility for allowing my communication to be misinterpreted, the complaint relies heavily on exaggeration and, in one instance, outright fabrication.

§1: Initial Interaction with Complainant

Allegation: That my initial interaction with the complainant was hostile and aggressive.

I refute the allegation of hostility. My intent was friendly, initiated by asking if she was new to the facility. The subsequent conversation was not characterised by aggression, but by mutual and detailed engagement. The discussion spanned several personal interests, including specific literary tastes and her favourite bookshop and aspirations to complete her driving license and buy a car.

It is logically inconsistent to suggest that a person who felt threatened or subjected to hostility would voluntarily disclose personal details required for a conversation of this depth and duration. I acknowledge that I used a few “playful jabs” or teasing remarks during the exchange. I recognise that my direct and informal communication style, while intended humorously and collegially, was a social misstep that was misinterpreted as challenging in a formal setting. I regret the resulting discomfort.

§2: Incident in the Animal Unit

Allegation: That I made a comment indicating malicious intent regarding an animal in a controlled unit.

I accept that the comment made—a poorly judged, flippant joke referencing the frog’s known biological properties—was utterly inappropriate and a failure to observe professional communication standards in a regulated environment.

I want to be clear that the remark was intended as a demonstration of dark humor and did not—and logically could not—represent a statement of intent to violate safety protocols. I made the comment immediately upon seeing the animal, and I took no action to follow through. The remark was patently absurd and immediately recognisable as a non-serious jest.

However, I understand that in an environment where safety and protocol are paramount, staff are required to treat any statement that hints at a security or welfare violation as a risk, no matter how implausible. I regret the serious lapse in professional judgment that necessitated the involvement of security personnel for an incident that posed no actual threat.

§3: Bus Stop Incident

Allegation: That I swore at the complainant and became hostile after she refused to provide a lab item.

I categorically deny the claim that I swore at the complainant or acted with hostility. The event described in the complaint is a fabrication designed to invert the roles of the interaction.

The factual exchange was:

- I neutrally asked if she had the outstanding lab item.
- She responded with an immediate and hostile “No”.

- Recognising her clear discomfort and abrupt hostility, I simply said, “Ok,” and immediately turned and walked away. My action was one of swift disengagement from the confused situation, which directly contradicts the claim that I initiated hostility or used aggressive language.

My action was one of immediate retreat and de-escalation, which directly contradicts the claim that I initiated hostility or used aggressive language. I believe this detail was manufactured to justify her own initial rude response and subsequent decision to file a complaint.

Conclusion and Commitment

Moving forward, I am implementing a strict policy of discretion and clear boundary management in my academic interactions. To mitigate any further potential for social miscommunication or perceived hostility, I will restrict all contact with my peers solely to necessary, strictly procedural, and verifiable academic requirements. This proactive measure will ensure that all my interactions remain professionally rigid, thereby fulfilling the university’s requirement for a non-disruptive, if highly impersonal, learning environment.

I recognise that the accumulated nature of these complaints requires a clear path forward. The common thread is not malicious intent on my part, but a severe and repeated misinterpretation of my direct communication style and humor.

I ask that the committee evaluate the factual records—the demonstrable lack of aggression and the complete fabrication in §3—and formally dismiss all present and historical allegations related to this matter. Furthermore, I formally request that the administration cease any further investigation, documentation, or discussion of non-academic matters related to my conduct. I require explicit confirmation that all official records pertaining to these alleged social infractions will be marked as resolved and permanently closed. I need this administrative matter concluded definitively to ensure I can focus entirely on my Master’s research without further, continuous scrutiny, which I perceive as distracting and burdensome.

Sincerely,

Harry Wright
